The Bowl table explores the sensation of movement in a static object. The ceramic bowl seems to act on the thin metal table top, which is curved, as if gravity was part of the design. Not only the shape is reduced to the essential minimal, as it suggests an environment with more free space, since the table top has the minimum depth needed to support everyday use objects — such as glasses, plates and books — and the ceramic bowl offers a simple solution for objects that are often scattered on the coffee tables, leaving the environment even cleaner and lighter.
